

SOCIAL SUPPORT

Identifying a Mentor or Coach

Mentor or Coach

2 x

People with high levels of resilience are 2 x more likely to have a mentor or coach

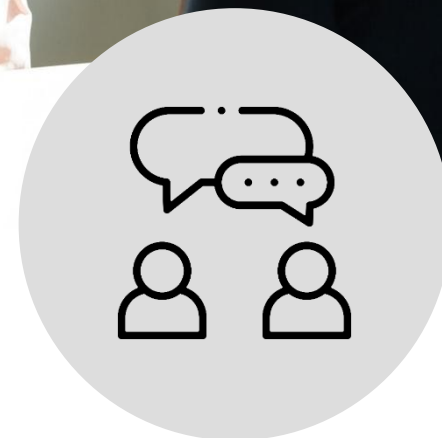

64%

% respondents with high levels of resilience who have a mentor/coach

33%

% respondents with average/low levels of resilience who have a mentor/coach

Mentor or Coach

MENTOR

Mentors provide advice and guidance to the individual based on their personal experience. Relationships are typically long term.

COACH

Coaches provide the individual with support on specific personal or career based goals, helping them realise their true potential. Relationships are often short term, focusing on a specific area for development.

Common Characteristics of a Mentoring/Coaching Relationship

1

TRUSTING

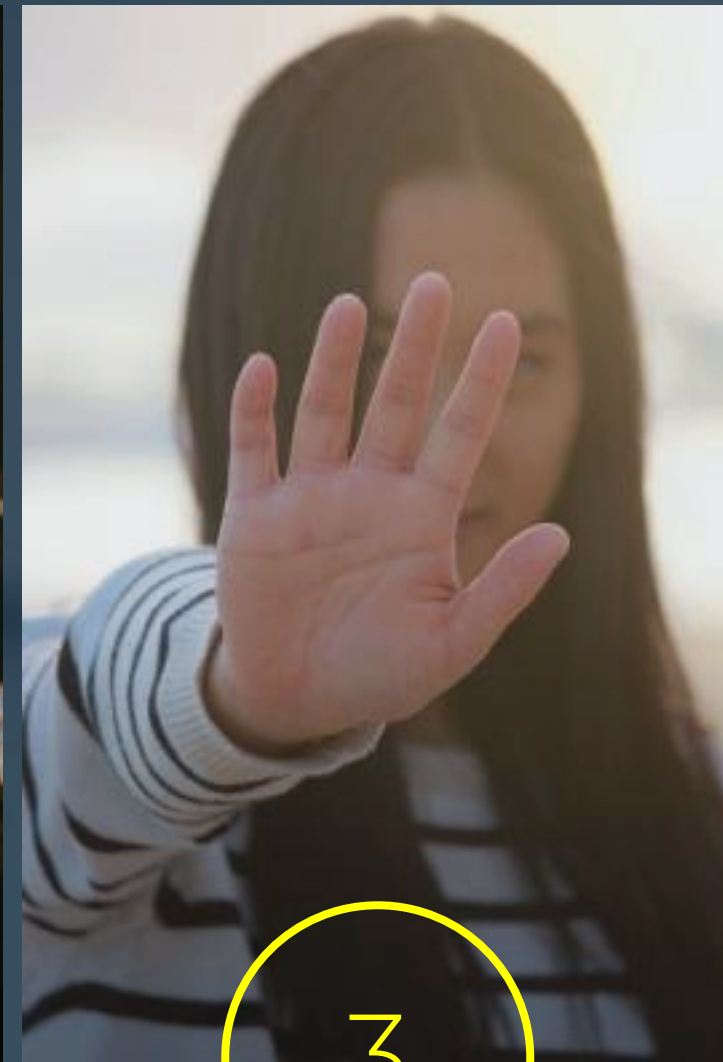

High levels of trust between the parties.

2

SAFE

A safe environment with open dialogue.

3

OPEN

No judgement between the parties.

4

AWARENESS

Developing self-awareness.

5

FOCUS

Identifying a vision or purpose with goals.

6

GROWTH

Development of new behaviours and skills.

7

PROGRESS

Unlocking someone's true potential.

Identifying a Mentor or Coach

Best Practice

Decide what help and support you need – career, life, skills etc.

Establish whether a mentor or coach would be more appropriate.

Career mentoring - identify someone who is not in your management line who can provide you with advice and guidance, or someone from outside your organisation who has followed a similar career path.

Understand whether there is a mentoring/coaching programme available in your own organisation and how to engage them.

Coaching – identify an accredited coach (e.g. ICF) and select someone who is outside of your circle of friends, family and colleagues.

Consider having more than one mentor to help you along your personal journey.